BOOK CLUB NEWS FOR MAY 2015

There is something monstrous about a disease that kills by wanting to live; cancer’s goal is to grow and prosper, with absolutely no regard for its host. In recent years, the trend has gone one step beyond talking about cancer -- the goal now, at least for pop culture, is to find the humor in it. Fortunately, John Green is the kind of writer to deliver it.”

Thus Rachel Syme, National Public Radio reviewer, launches her review of The Fault of Our Stars: Love In A Time Of Cancer. She says “[Green’s] language is complex, his syntax adult. ... He freely references Kierkegaard and William Carlos Williams alongside bloody video games and action movies. ...[Green’s] latest may be his best book yet. The real tragedy of cancer is that it affects people of all ages, and children suffering from the disease are often hit hardest.”

“Hazel, 16, has been battling thyroid cancer since age 13, and only through the use of an experimental drug is she still alive. ... Depressed and lonely, she tries a support group, where she meets the handsome -- and deceptively sick -- Augustus Waters, a 17-year-old dreamboat, who quickly proceeds to turn her life into an adventure.”

“Green’s novel is elegantly plotted, and as sad in places as one might expect a book about adolescent cancer to be. But it is also brimming with joy,” Syme writes.

Any University Club member is welcome to attend Book Group for which participants gather in the Club’s Front Lounge at 6p.m. for cocktails and conversation, followed by dinner and discussion of the book in the VIP Lounge.

Dorothy Paul will lead discussion of the Green book. Jared Diamond’s The World Until Yesterday will be read for the June 11th meeting, and Dwayne Bourret will begin discussion of its contents.
